ABSTRACT

Documents in this bibliography are grouped into fifteen categories under four broad headings. The first heading, health problems, contains documents which cover several aspects of a given type or class of health problems. The categories listed under this heading are: chronic disorders; acute episodes; mental and personality disorders; pregnancy, childbearing and the puerperium; and environmental health. Preventive health practices, illness behavior and utilization, and compliance with therapeutic regimens are the categories which are included in the second heading, behavioral problems. This heading contains documents which either focus on a specific behavioral aspect of the health problem, or in which the type of behavior influences more than one type of health problem. Documents dealing with a specific factor influencing the behavioral problem, or a type of factor influencing more than one behavioral or health problem, are listed under the third heading, factors influencing behavior. This heading includes predisposing factors, enabling factors, and reinforcing factors. The fourth heading is educational and developmental methods and strategies, and is used for documents which focus on planning, description or evaluation of specific methods, media, materials, techniques, organizational designs, etc. The categories listed under this heading are: communications theory and practice, community organization, staff development and administration, and research and evaluation methods. VOL. 2, NO. 2, FALL 1974

The Society for Public Health Education, Inc. is a professional organization whose membership is comprised of persons having specialized preparation and involvement in public health education.

Health Education Monographs is the official publication of the Society. Monographs is designed to further the Society's purpose of promoting the health of all people by encouraging research, improving practice, and elevating standards of public health education.

The highest priority is given to manuscripts which contribute to knowledge of health behavior and draw implications for program planning and evaluation, and to those manuscripts which detail the application of behavioral research to health planning and social action. An effort is made to present both state-of-the-science research and practice in a format which encourages their application to public health practitioners. The Editor especially welcomes papers concerned with the adaptation of health services to meet consumer needs and with the development of individual and community initiative in achieving desired health goals, both processes and content.

SUBSCRIPTION INFORMATION. Health Education Monographs is issued quarterly. The subscription rate is $10.00 for four issues. Price per copy is assigned: 1-24 copies $3.00 each, 25 copies and over $2.50 each. Make checks payable to Health Education Monographs and mail to Charles B.
